

Associate in Applied Science

Simulation and Game Development

(A25450A)

Design Concentration

Overview

Turn your passion for games into a career. Central Piedmont is home to the first state-approved game-development degree in the country, and this program immerses you in the full craft—design, programming, and 3D modeling and animation—using the same industry-standard tools studios rely on, from Unreal Engine and Unity to Maya, ZBrush, and the Adobe suite.

The Design concentration focuses on what makes games fun—game design and mechanics, level design, virtual environments, multiplayer, and narrative—so you can shape player experiences from concept to playtest.

Employment Outlook

The game industry is booming, and the skills you'll build reach well beyond it. Graduates work in entertainment, education, healthcare, engineering, and simulation—anywhere interactive 3D and software come together—and hands-on, portfolio-driven coursework plus work-based learning get you ready for real studio work.

Your degree can open doors to roles like Game Designer, Level Designer, Narrative Designer, Gameplay Designer, and QA Analyst.
